This house situated at 2637 Cedar Avenue was built in 1860. Probably served as a home for H. Gould who owned a tract of land in the original tract #89 which he sub-divided into smaller lots. This particular house being placed upon sub-lot #9.

This tract at that time was removed several miles from the city property and the house probably was used either as a country home or the home of a well-to-do farmer.

It is a good example of the Greek revival in architecture and many of the details showing the manner of construction are still well preserved. The front porch with its fluted columns, the entrance doorway and long windows opening onto the porch with their simple details are good examples of what was considered good architecture in the early nineteenth century.
